

Learning Support Assistant Person Specification

Essential

You will

- have a strong social conscience and a desire to make a difference to young people and adults who have experienced or display one or more of the following: exclusion from mainstream school, learning disabilities, challenging behaviour, mental health difficulties, other special needs.
- be able to demonstrate good interpersonal and communication skills
- be able to act as a role model, demonstrating good working ethics and practices
- be able to demonstrate an understanding of the requirement for confidentiality
- be numerate and literate
- be able to work flexibly, on your own initiative or with others, including helping in areas other than your own speciality as required.
- be able to demonstrate commitment to ongoing professional development

Desirable

- Experience of working in a learning environment
- Experience of working with disadvantaged adults

Supported work experience for people with learning difficulties